Woman's Health with changing lifestyle

Dr Kiran M. Rajpole (MD,FCPS,DGO)

"Change" is the only constant thing in life and is the basic characteristic of Evolution. Change is a gradual process of adaptation. Evolutionary requirements can be at various levels from demographic changes due to migration, dietary, physical activities to extension of life span. These can impact our physical and mental health. Over years now researchers have proved enough that woman’s health needs more attention than just child bearing health issues.

Last decade has witnessed a great change in women empowerment. Social roles, economic freedom, contraceptive acceptance has increased, but similarly there is an increase in stress, stress-related illnesses, changing lifestyle and alcohol addiction.

Changing lifestyle has major impact on woman’s health in all age groups. Obesity is an epidemic due to changed dietary habits and lack of physical activities. Modernization with dependency on electronic gadgets has increased and cut down on day to day basic physical activities like walking, cycling, climbing stairs. Household activities has also been cut down due to use of modern equipments. This has lead to sedentary lifestyle. Dietary habits also have changed over the period drastically. Easy availability of high caloric fast food is replacing the traditional healthy food. This imbalance between calorie intake and its intake invites obesity.

Obesity itself can complicate the pregnancy by inviting hypertension, diabetes, obstructed labour and risk of anaesthesia. Overweight and obesity also harm the self body image and stresses woman to avail easy weight loss options with drastic crash diets, difficult exercise schedules and unneccessary cosmetic procedure. Obesity in long term does increases the morbidity due to hypertension, diabetes mellitus, osteoporosis and cardiac complications. Maintaining Body mass index (BMI) in healthy range since puberty is the golden key to healthy womanhood. Appropriate healthy balanced diet and regular exercise is required to maintain BMI in healthy range.

Polycystic ovarian disease(PCOD) is one of most common health problem in adolescent and reproductive age group. Strong association of PCOD with obesity has been established. It is metabolic disease affecting systematic hormonal cascade causing abnormally in normal ovulation process. It can affect woman’s health in many ways from menstrual irregularity, hirsutism (male pattern of hair growth on the body and face), subfertility, recurrent abortions to high risk pregnancy. It can be diagnosed by blood hormone tests and sonography. Medical and surgical treatment options are available as per the severity of the disease. Treatment depends on the symptoms and concern of patient. For unmarried girls, medications for regularisation of periods and treatment of cosmetic concern can be given. Those desirous of conceiving, treatment with medications leading to proper ovulation can be given. In pregnancy proper sugar control and supportive care to prevent pregnancy complications will be needed. In elderly women who had PCOD, metabolic issues like Hypertension(raised blood pressure), heart diseases as a part of hyperestrogen related complications should be screened and addressed.

Since last few decades female literacy rate is increasing remarkably. It has reflected in women empowerment leading to acceptance of social responsibilities, economic freedom causing stress related health issues. Career has become one of the priorities in woman’s health. Neglecting marriage and planning pregnancies, which may not be at right age, is a reproductive age group. Advanced age itself is high risk for pregnancy. Delaying pregnancy causes uninterrupted hormonal effect on reproductive system. It triggers estrogen dependent inherited conditions like fibrosis (uterine tumour), adenomyosis (overgrowth of uterine musculature), endometriosis (chronic painful cysts of brown cysts due to abnormal menstruation), endometrial hyperplasia (unusual thickening of uterine inner lining), uterine and breast cancers. These cause subfertility and couples have to resort to assisted reproduction technologies. Early detection and treatment has much more chance of successful pregnancy has been remarkably changed. Considering priorities of couple’s needs, their choice of treatment option can be availed. These practices alter the body rhythm and challenges woman’s physical and mental health. New trends of planning the pregnancy have increased the acceptance of contraceptive, though not optimum. Emergency contraception pills, abortion pill usage is on rise on the other hand. It does invites health hazards causing menstrual problems and psychological disturbances. With changing work culture, changing life ethics, accessibility of contraception and available easy safe abortion options has increased promiscuity. Lack of knowledge of appropriate usage of contraceptive methods may invite sexually transmitted diseases and Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) in infected household. Early detection and seeking treatment are important to avoid long term effects on health. HIV infection does complicate the pregnancy. HIV infection can get transmitted to fetus from mother during pregnancy, but now timely antiretroviral therapies can prevent this. Untoward pregnancy outcomes and child can also be prevented from HIV infection. To prevent cervical cancer, now vaccine against HPV infection is available. It is most effective when taken prior to the exposure and can be given from age 9.

Developing nuclear family norms has stressed couple in child raising. Restricting the number of children desired has increased the usages of inappropriate abortion under stress causing health hazards.

Addictions like alcohol, smoking are on rise in young women. It increases the chances of psychological dependency, diabetes, hypertension and malignancies. In pregnancy it affects foetus causing low birth weight, birth defects, developmental problems, foetal alcohol syndrome causing learning difficulties in child.

With changing lifestyle and ethics in individual and social level has challenged woman’s life at various fronts. It has been proved by researchers that women have higher rates of psychological distress, depression and physical morbidity than men. The factors involved in increasing stress are balancing lifestyle, responsibilities along with their workload participation, increasing divorce, single parenting and its social acceptance. Stress can affect neuro endocrinial pathways leading to menstrual disturbances, subfertility and mental health instability.

Menopause is one of the most challenging phases in a woman’s life. Regression of female hormones at this stage affects physical and mental health. Loss of muscle tone and calcium deficiency at this stage causes urinary incontinence, physical morbidity, and joint stiffness. Mood swings and hot flushes are the most common symptoms. These menopausal problems can be resolved with newer medicine options and self-treatment.

Computer technology has been the biggest invention of century. It has evolved medical teaching modalities, diagnostic imaging technology, advance medical equipment, data collection, research, newer treatment techniques and many more. It has definitely broadened the scope of precision in diagnosis and treatment. On the other hand, due to easy access and rampant usage of internet, patients are misguided by unauthentic medical information. Than seeking medical advice in person, self-treatment with internet medical knowledge is increasing and is threatening at times.

Advanced surgical techniques in gynaecology offers better recovery than traditional operative procedures. Recent times with advanced diagnostic imaging techniques are helping in precision of diagnosis. Thus, the radical extensive surgeries trend has been replaced to preservative surgeries. Revolutionary endoscopy and robotic surgery modalities have cut down the hospital stay and physical morbidity after operative procedure. Hence choosing a surgical option as a treatment is more assuring for women in current times.

Recently with changing lifestyle and lifestyle, we are facing the era of COVID 19 pandemic. It is part of evolutionary process affecting human life. Due to lack of adequate scientific data on such newer infections, it has definitely stressed reproductive age group of women. To resolve apprehension of complications, many women are seeking medical advice in present times. It has been observed that women outnumber men at age 65 years. During the reproductive age for many years women are protected from cardiac risk due to cardio protective action of female hormone estrogen. Post-menopause with aging, risk of osteoporosis, malignancies, and cardiovascular problems increases, leading to morbidity life. For seeking professional opportunities, children staying away from family because of work, causes sudden void and can induce depression. It demands early attention and apt action. Engaging into recreational activities and maintaining fitness will boost the confidence to overcome these ailments.
